"The unstoppable psychopathic authority"

By Pardis Tabaei Damavandi

Steps taken to resolve damages and losses

After "my recent fight" with the psychopaths at the Edinburgh Sheriff court was over with my conviction, I really believed it would really be over; it wasn't.

On a positive note, I did make an appeal and raised a complaint to the Judiciary of Scotland which responded to me after 24 hours via email. This was done upon legal advice. I was also advised by many solicitors to not let go of the assault I had received by the misconduct predator officer which I now realise more than ever how dangerous it was and how downplayed it had been. The letter attached in the response email to the Judicial complaint office was coming from a "policy officer" which I immediately understood it was not "normal". In no way this verbally abusive policy officer would hold office any other places abroad and not even down South in England, but I knew had I replied to that email she would incur me further losses. Only yesterday I reviewed a judicial review I had submitted with the Court of Session back in July 2019 that the same policy officer and her "gang" had dismissed and never presented to any Judges. The policy officer had obviously had contact with Police Scotland before and had disposed of the complaint twice until I had contacted the Scottish Tribunal service with the receipt. The lady there also was frustrated as she could not help. Still, I never received a response and that was in the summer. Therefore I simply forwarded the email to a minister and asked him to look into the matter himself.

I was now advised to continue complaining. I therefore complained further perhaps with a few deviations.

In the meantime I searched and spoke with several psychologists and psychiatrists, read books as well as contacted other solicitors, and learnt a lot about a few of these "types", tricks and also was taught that psychologists have been able to predict psychopathic behaviour.

The main trait of a psychopath which is far worse than that of a serial killer is a lack of remorse. Even serial killers confess to what they do and that probes some conscience, but psychopaths are unstoppable and any further direct or indirect contact produces losses.

This makes the psychopath appear invincible, but they are not.

So what does break a psychopath down? Nothing breaks them down as they cower and hide.

This strategy makes them even more likable as it is a fake form of victimism. It also makes real victims look as dishonest in the event they get caught or as the perpetrators (although this case is very rare as it is unreasonable to think so with the evidence held). Apparently "the lawyer" is the answer to this, or the Judge that overturns a decision, but the problem is where do you find them?

And to that I still have no answer but there are a lot of avenues and different paths you can adopt to defeat a psychopath. You are alone and the psychopath although has the lowest Intelligence Quotient is a dangerous individual and may recruit intelligent people as support network, so in my view caution is still important. Another strategy to use is I am told not to contact friends as the psychopath will have already reached out to them and turned them against you. I do not believe a true friend would turn against you and I doubt reaching to your friends on their part would be legal. I am told it isn't.

Psychiatrists also believe that psychopaths are manipulators but I have seen these manipulators manipulated too and it was quite a defeat on their part.

Smart people can manipulate better they just must decide to do so which is hard when you have that much empathy but the application of self-empathy should be a good enough reason to do it within limitations. It is even better going through a third party I was advised.

Just like the psychopathic Police and the Judge or the Procurator would recruit the enquiries office clerk or the policy officer or other police officers to deliver threats, so can you use a third party to defend yourself. Actually, it is best to use a third party to attack them with the law because defence is a difficult position to be in.

Some other psychiatrists believe that psychopaths never give up but I think the simple fact that they do not give up can be used to expose them. This can be done by quoting them. I noticed this with the psychopathic officer and sheriff. Even a bad sentence uttered by either can be highlighted as evidence to their behaviour. The other problem with psychopaths is they hate when their mistakes are pointed out due to their ego. An example is the judicial decision which was unreasonable in my case and in any case of miscarriage, but the cause for it was the bias in making such decision was the underlying reason however the 'Sheriff from hell' quoted also by the Police whom he represented and the policy officer and the procurator (all psychopaths in office) was that the Judicial decision was wrong, almost as if someone else made it for him. Again, this deflects any responsibility for his actions. Accepting that biases are wrong should be intrinsic in the Judicial profession so that statement makes no sense as don't most psychopaths.

The main weakness of the psychopath is their lack of rationality so they are not as invincible as they are fantasised to be but they can be risky and that we need to accept as individuals which is why asking for third party help is essential.

Thus I do hope this short opinion can help many others who have been affected by the negative actions of psychopaths in positions they should have never been hired in, however, Hare explains that the hiring process can be misleading in the way the psychopath is a great liar and portrays the self as a 'snake in suit'.

Again, receiving these unhelpful responses during covid-19 is not to be expected but psychopaths do not understand what empathy is. They have empathy for themselves though. I think the most difficult challenge is finding the right help to enlist and not give up. Even if injustice happens the truth always does come out and psychiatrists themselves state that it may be in an afterlife but it still does. It is best to search for justice in this one and be more philosophical than religious about it. Rationality is after all, characteristic of the human species to the extent that it allowed our animal race to thrive as well as the plant race. It makes no sense to allow irrationality to take place and disrupt our lives to the extent of endangering the species.